

Provenza steps up, again and again

By Letters to the Editor From page B4 | June 28, 2015

On Wednesday June 10, an article in The Enterprise covered the funding challenges facing social welfare programs in Yolo County. These critically necessary services often fall through the cracks in traditional federal and state government budgets. This time it was about the Yolo County Children's Alliance and resource centers it operates in West Sacramento and Clarksburg.

Once again our county supervisors, especially Jim Provenza, stepped up and provided funding to maintain the most vital services of the Children's Alliance.

Last month, another article covered the celebration of saving the Yolo Crisis Nursery from closure. Again, Jim Provenza was at the center of the yearlong effort to reconfigure the nursery and assure its continuation. Jim joined other key figures in stating "closure is not an option" and led the county's financial participation in the collaboration that succeeded in preserving the nursery's operations.
